4. [] to discuss the specific information he needs in preparing the OTR phase of his history project. He indicated that he had acquired some of the basic information by checking the Executive Register and by reviewing the schedules of OTR materials in the Records Center. He felt that it was now necessary that he deal directly with a number of different people within OTR to discuss organizational changes, dates of the changes, key personnel involved and particularly the why of such changes. Realizing some of the problems involved in [] seeking information from various and sundry sources within OTR, [] offered to be the focal point and to gather the information he has requested. He also asked about reports of investigating committees, i.e., the Inspector General's report on OTR. [] advised him that these reports would have to be obtained through the DTR.
